

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

The Protocol Book of Cuthbert Simson, published by the Grampian Club twenty years ago, has to some extent familiarised students of local history with the general characteristics of the class of records to which it belongs. But while all the protocol books of notaries officiating in this country possess features in common, their distinctive peculiarities vary with the sphere in which the notary exercised his vocation. Simson was chapter clerk of Glasgow at a time when the ancient church was powerful in the land. He had a large share, if not a monopoly, of the notarial business which the Glasgow clerics had at their disposal, and, accordingly, in his register are to be found not only particulars regarding properties throughout the diocese, but also accounts of proceedings against heretics and other transgressors of ecclesiastical law, together with references to the various matters coming under the wide jurisdiction of the consistorial court. Contrasted with this extensive range of subjects, the Protocols now introduced to the notice of the public deal with matters comprehended within narrow limits, being confined almost exclusively to transfers of property in Glasgow and the western shires; but still the stores of topographical and genealogical information which they contain are such that their publication will doubtless be welcomed by investigators into these branches of knowledge.

Outside legal and archaeological circles so little is known concerning Notaries and their Protocols that it has been thought desirable to give a brief outline of their history.

Under the Roman system of jurisprudence, Public Notaries, or Tabellions, as they were otherwise designated, were erected into a school or college, governed by a superior officer holding commission from the Emperor, and care was taken that none should be admitted into the body except those who were of good fame and skilful in the laws. The members were employed in preparing agreements and forming public instruments regarding them, which were treated as probative and entitled to receive legal effect; and they also formed the acts and judicial proceedings of the courts of law. After the fall of the Roman empire, the Emperors who succeeded to the title borne by the Cæsars, and claimed their prerogatives, were accustomed to appoint Imperial Notaries, who were authorised to exercise their office in any country which had ever been subject to the Roman authority. The Popes also, in virtue of their spiritual supremacy, asserted universal jurisdiction, and appointed Apostolic notaries, for whom was claimed the privilege of exercising their office in any part of the world, both in spiritual and temporal affairs, and to the exclusion of Imperial Notaries in spiritual concerns. For securing the privileges of both orders, Notaries frequently procured admission in a two-fold capacity, and these in their instruments are designed as acting "Apostolica et Imperiali auctoritatibus." In this country an important change was made in the system of admission by an act of the Scottish Parliament, passed in the tenth year of the reign of King James III. (1469 c. 6). Proceeding on the preamble that "oure Soverane Lord hes ful jurisdictione and fre empire within his realme," it was ordained "that his hienes may mak notaries and tabelliones quhais instrumentis sal have ful faith in all contractis civile within the realme; and in tyme cummyn that na notaris maid, nor to be maid, be the Imperouris autorite have faith in contractis civile within the realme, les than he be examinyt be the ordinare (i.e., the judge ordinary in the ecclesiastical courts), and approvit be the Kingis hienes." While the authority of the Imperial notaries was thus curtailed, it was provided that "ful faith be givin to the Papale notaries in tymes bygane and to cum in all thare instrumentis." With regard to the notaries to be appointed in future by the King, it was ordained that they "be examinit before thair ordinaris bischopis, and have certificatioun of them that thai ar of faith, gude fame, science and lawte (loyalty), according to the said office." Subsequent to this act, notaries who had been admitted by Imperial authority, and in compliance with the new law obtained the Royal approval, were designed as holding office "auctoritatibus Imperiali et Regali."

Another act of parliament, passed in 1503 (c. 8), alludes to complaints made by the lieges against the mal-practices of "fals notaris," and regulations were set down for preventing fraud and insuring greater efficiency. The ecclesiastical judges, "bischopis and ordinaris," were directed to call before them all the notaries within their dioceses, to examine them upon their qualifications and demeanour, and those found acceptable were to be reported to the King, who was to depute certain persons to examine them farther, "and gif thai be ganand (i.e., found fit), to mak them regale gif thai be nocht maid regale of befor."

Previous to this time notaries belonged exclusively to the class of churchmen, but from the terms of a statute passed in 1540 (c. 37), it is to be inferred that laymen were then beginning to enter the profession. By this act sheriffs were required to examine laic notaries, and the "ordinaries" all notaries spiritual, within their respective bounds, and to admit them by acts of court; and, with the view of securing uniformity in the attestation of instruments, notaries were required to insert in a book the signs and subscriptions to be used by them in all instruments passing under their hands. By the statute 1551 (c. 17), which sets forth that the acts concerning notaries had not hitherto been put to due execution, it was ordered that the laws should be duly enforced, and (c. 19) that within a certain time sheriffs should bring or send all "notars temporall men," and the ordinaries "all spiritual notars," within their respective bounds, to the burgh of Edinburgh, and there present them to the lords of council to be examined, and (if found qualified) admitted to the office, till which admission their instruments were to have no effect. It would seem, however, that the laws "anent notars" were not much honoured in the observance, because the next statute on the subject (1555, c. 18) again refers to the preceding acts as having "tane na dew and effectual execution." Sheriffs, bailies, and others, were therefore directed to cause the notaries within their respective districts to appear before the lords of council at Edinburgh, "bringand with them thair creatiounis and haill protocollis . . . to be examinat, and their creatiounis viseit by thame, their protocollis producit to be markit be the saidis lordis, and the levis numberit and the blankis markit . . . And as thai be fundin qualifeit and admittit be the saidis lordis of counsall to use the office of notar thairefter." If any notaries should be convicted of "falset," their moveable property was ordered to be forfeited, "and they to want thair rycht hand, and to be banist the realme for ever." Commenting on the dismemberment part of the punishment, the author of a work on "The Office of a Notary Public" (1812) complacently remarks that "the writing hand being regularly the right one, our statute orders the loss of it; and the reason of this punishment seems to be grounded upon the equity of the thing, for it is but reasonable that that part of the body should suffer which committed the crime."

With the abolition of consistorial jurisdictions consequent on the Reformation, farther changes in the system of admitting notaries were introduced. By the Act 1563 (c. 16), it was ordained that all notaries who had not as yet been examined by the lords of council should appear before them for that purpose, otherwise all instruments taken by them should be void; and further (c. 17), that in future no one should exercise the office "without thay be maid and creat be the Quenis Majesteis speciall letteris, and thereafter examinat and admittet be the lordis of sessioun and collage of justice, quha sall tak thair aithis . . . and caus register thair signe and subscriptioun quhilk thai sall use in all tymes efter thair said admissioun." By acts passed in 1567, no one was to be admitted a notary who did not profess the Evangell, and all were to be discharged and none to be admitted thereafter except those who were of the religion then received. By another act of the same year, which has worked beneficially for the preservation of these ancient registers, it was provided (c. 87), that the protocol books of notaries within the shire should be brought to the sheriff of the shire, and the books of those within burghs to the provost and bailies for custody. Subsequent statutes (1587 c. 29 and 1617 c. 22) provided for the delivery to the Clerk of Register in Edinburgh of all protocols excepting those of clerks of burghs, which were to remain with the magistrates.

Another act, passed in 1567 (c. 34), requires also to be noticed. It proceeds on a narrative of "the greit hurt done of befor within burgh be geving of sesingis privatlie without ane bailie" and "ane commune clerk of burgh, quairthrow our Soverane Lordis liegis may be defraudit greitlie," and enacts that "na sesing be gevin within burgh of ony maner of land or tenement within the samin, in ony tyme cuming, bot be ane of the baillies of the burgh and the commoun clerk thairof." From this time therefore it may be assumed that the protocol books of the town clerks of Glasgow record all transactions relating to heritable property within the ancient royalty.

Such is a summary of the legislation bearing upon Notaries and their Protocols. William Hegait, the writer of the Protocols of which abstracts are given in the following pages, was created a notary by apostolic authority in the year 1544. Complying with the requirements of the statute 1563 (c. 16), he attended before the lords of council at Edinburgh, in February, 1563-4, produced the instrument vouching his "creation," with his three Protocol Books for inspection, and having been found duly qualified, was authorised to continue in the exercise of his office. In the instruments passing under his hand previous to this time, Hegait's designation is "Clericus Glasguensis diocesis, auctoritate sacra Apostolica, notarius publicus;" but subsequent attestations run thus:—"Clericus Glasguensis diocesis, auctoritate Apostolica perprius, notarius, ac nunc per dominos concilii admissus." From the act of admission it is ascertained that Hegait was a native of Glasgow, was then (1563-4) forty-two years of age, and held the appointment of Court Clerk of Glasgow; and it is probable that he was also connected with the Barony Court. He does not appear to have been a priest, as so many of the Papal notaries were; but having been admitted by the Bishop he would, it is presumed, be entitled to exercise his office in any part of the diocese. At what period Hegait was first appointed to the office of town clerk has not been ascertained, as the existing council records from which the information might have been obtained do not commence till 1573. Between 1574 and 1580 (when another long hiatus occurs) his name appears yearly on the list from which the clerk was to be chosen; but on each occasion another candidate received the appointment. In the privy council register, under date 13th December, 1564, there is notice of a complaint by James Law, one of the bailies, against "William Hegait, common clerk, for the speaking of divers despitefull and injurious wordis to the said James, manifestly contempnand and vilipendand him, being bailie and magistrate." The accused official denied the charge, and as nothing farther is recorded on the subject it may be assumed that matters were satisfactorily arranged.

It is stated in his act of admission that Hegait's first protocol book commenced on 2nd October, 1544. Only a few torn corners, however, now remain of the first nine leaves, and the book commences with folio 10 and the date 2nd March, 1547-8. With the exception of this initial mutilation, the book is in excellent preservation and perfectly legible. As already indicated, the transactions recorded in it principally consist of attestations regarding the transfers of heritages. When a sale of such had to be carried through, and the property happened to be situated within the bounds of the burgh, the seller appeared personally on the ground, in presence of a bailie, notary and witnesses, and stating that he had sold the property to the purchaser, at a certain price, of which he acknowledged to have received payment, resigned the property into the hands of the bailie, by delivering to him earth and stone of the ground, or other symbols appropriate to the transaction. Having received the symbols, the bailie, as authorised by the seller, and in virtue of his office, delivered them to the purchaser, or to an attorney acting for him, and thus gave him sasine or possession of his purchase. The purchaser then asked the notary to prepare an instrument setting forth the proceedings. This the notary did by recording the particulars in his protocol book, and also in the instrument, which latter was delivered to the purchaser, and retained by him as his title deed. When the property was not held by burgage tenure, there was produced a precept authorising a bailie named in it—designated a bailie “in hac parte,” i.e., in that part, or in that special matter—to give sasine, and proceedings of investiture, similar to those in burgage properties, were followed (See 2, 30, 42, 58, &c.) The bailie of the Subdean of Glasgow seems to have had the privilege of giving infeftment in lands situated in the Provanside district (See Nos. 25, 38, 211, &c.)

When an heir desired to obtain infeftment, he appeared before one of the bailies, produced evidence of propinquity, and humbly required the bailie to give him infeftment in the property of which his ancestor had been vested at the time of his death. The bailie having found the claim to be just and reasonable, proceeded to the ground, and there in presence of a notary and witnesses gave sasine in the usual manner.

The symbols used in giving sasine both for lands and tenements are usually earth and stone, though for tenements hasp and staple (i.e., the latch, lock, or other fastenings of the door) are occasionally mentioned. In protocol No. 17 the symbols for the two tenements and yards are earth and stone, and for the annualrent hasp and staple. Hasp and staple were the usual symbols for infeftment in annualrents payable from tenements, e.g. Nos. 28, 31, 65, 157, 186. Less frequently, as in No. 197, the symbol was a penny, and in No. 35 the symbols were put alternatively hasp and staple or a penny. When annualrents were payable from lands in the country, as in Nos. 235 to 237, the symbol was a penny. In No. 59 the symbols were earth and stone for the lands, and net and coble for the fishings; and in No. 120 sasine was given in property in Kilbryde parish by delivery of rafter and rigging of the buildings.

In the Appendix a few protocols are given in extenso for the purpose of showing the style of the protocols, so that the reader may gather from them the mode adopted in framing the abstracts. An abstract of every protocol is given, and the descriptions of properties and names and designations of individuals are invariably preserved intact, the aim being to present the essence of the original, and only to leave out the formalities. The protocols, it will be observed, begin with a statement of the date, the indiction, and the pontificate. The two latter particulars, instead of being repeated each time in the abstracts, have been printed at the top of the page. News from Rome in these days appears from the state of the notary's information on Papal affairs to have been often dilatory and sometimes unreliable. Thus though Pope Paul III. died on 10th November, 1549, his name appears in the protocols up to 27th February, 1549-50. On the 5th of the following month there is the memorandum "Romana curia uti relatum erat pastore carente," and a similar note is repeated in the protocols till 26th July. Julius III., who was elected on 8th February, 1549-50, and died 5th March, 1554-5, first appears in the protocols on 18th August, 1550, and his name is still continued on 14th May, 1555. Paul IV. was elected on 23rd May, 1555, and his pontificate is first noticed in the protocols on 5th June thereafter, but under the misnomer of Julius IV. In the Abstracts these mistakes and any other clerical slips are not taken into account, the correct year both of pontificate and indiction being given. The Indiction current during the period embraced in the Abstracts commenced on 24th September, 1542.

The greater number of the protocols refer to properties in the city of Glasgow, then a town of moderate dimensions. The main thoroughfare, stretching from the Market Cross to the Cathedral Church, had dwellings and booths on each side, the number on the west preponderating, as on the opposite side considerable space was taken up by the Blackfriars Convent and College buildings and grounds. Southward from the Cross a street extended to the South Port and then branched off obliquely towards the bridge. Again starting from the Cross the Gallowgait extended eastward a little beyond the Molendinar Burn, and the Trongait westward, with a prolongation towards St. Tenu's Chapel. There were few buildings in the Gallowgait on the east side of the Molendinar, while those on the north side of the Trongait did not extend farther than the West Port. There were a few houses in Stockwellgait, and a turreted building at the northwest corner. At least one wynd extended from Trongait to Bridgegait, and there were also wynds or vennels on each side of the High Street. From the Wyndhead, otherwise called the Quadrivium, the Ratounraw branched out on the west and the Drygait on the east, and these streets were largely occupied by the dwellings of church dignitaries. In 1587 the freemen and inhabitants of that locality, in a supplication to parliament, represented that the part of the city situated above the Greyfriars Wynd, "afoir the reformation of the religioun, wes intertenyt and uphalden be the resort of the Bischop, Parsonis, and Vicaris," and was "the onlie ornament of the citie, be ressonne of the grite and sumptuous buildings of grite antiquitie, varie proper and meit for the ressait of his Hienes and nobilitie at sic tymes as thai sall repair thairto."¹ A few isolated dwellings might be scattered here and there beyond the range of the streets above enumerated, but, subject to such exceptions, the built area of the city was confined within the limits indicated. Dr. Cleland, in his Statistical Account of Glasgow, estimated that the population of the town at the time of the Reformation amounted to about 4500.

With the view of conveying a better idea of the topographical features of the city, and making the descriptions in the protocols more intelligible, the accompanying Sketch Plan has been prepared by Mr. M'Donald, city engineer. Further information on many points is, however, desiderated in order that the plan might be made more specific. Subsequent protocols will doubtless reveal much that is at present unknown, and confirm or demolish doubtful theories. Poldrait Burn, which it is believed has not previously been delineated on any plan of Glasgow, has been laid down from a consideration of the two or three references to it in the protocols, coupled with inferences drawn from the configuration of ground in the vicinity; but other descriptions may determine the precise position of the stream. The sites of the chapel of St. Roche and its cemetery, and of the Greyfriars Convent, with the positions of some of the crofts, may also be settled with greater precision when subsequent protocols are published. The "burn called Glasgw," which flowed through a verdant holm, between its source near the church of St. Kentigern and its outlet a few yards beyond the reputed tomb of St. Tenu, has hitherto appeared on maps as St. Enoch's Burn; but "Glasgow" is the original name, and one which occasionally appears in title deeds at the present day. Perhaps these facts have hitherto escaped notice, or, at all events, have not received due prominence in discussions on the origin of the name of the city.

At the end of Hegait's first volume, after the last protocol, are five leaves, on the first page of which Robert Scott, director of chancery, has written his certificate stating the contents (p. 88). The pen also has been drawn diagonally through this and each of the six succeeding pages which are otherwise blank, except that at the top of the 7th page there is scribbled "R. Doune the said Johne." On page 8 there is a memorandum, written in Latin, bearing that on 21st October, 1546, Hugh Monthgumry of Hasilheid delivered to Thomas Monthgumry of Skelmurlie, a letter of bailiary, dated at Irvyne, 17th August preceding; another letter of the bailiary of Stewartoun of the same date; a letter of assignation of the ten pound land of Skelmurlie, the eight pound land of Loichlokerthsyde in the sheriffdom of Renfrew, the twenty merk land of Loichransay, and the twelve merk land of Sannokis, within the Isle of Arrane and shire of Bute; and a contract between George Monthgumry of Scelmurlie and John Monthgumry of Langschaw, dated at Irvyne, 16th August, in the same year. Following the memorandum is a letter from Hegait to a brother notary, which runs thus:—"Brethir,—Pleis yow ressave this my prothogoll buk ye wrait for. Concernyng Dike, that fallow, I salbe at yow schortlie and satife your lawbour, God willing, quha haif yow in his protectioun.—Your brother, W. HEGAIT. To my brother Maister James Donaldsoun delivyr this." There is no marking on page 9. The last page is nearly covered with writing, but being much soiled and slightly mutilated, the moral precepts and maxims of which it seems to be composed cannot be very well made out connectedly. An admonition in favour of "vertuus levyng and in doing of gud" can be only partially deciphered, while another, more legible, reminds one somewhat of a passage in Burns:—

"Aye free, aff han', your story tell,
When wi' a bosom crony;
But still keep something to yoursel'
Ye scarcely tell to ony."

The Protocol Book version runs thus:—"Reveile nevir the secreit of thine mynde to na maner of persone except yow wit weile he is thine verray freind and will nocht reveile it agane." Following upon this cautious counsel comes the injunction, "Speik evill of na maner of man nor woman, nowder absent nor present,"—an excellent precept and presumably needed in the sixteenth century.

There are in the city's archives forty-one protocol books in all, embracing the period from 1547 to 1696. From 1694 onward there is a regular series of Sasine Registers, which superseded the protocol books. These number at the present time close upon one thousand volumes, and are increasing at the rate of sixteen volumes annually. It is proposed that the publication of abstracts of the protocols should be brought down to at least the year 1600. There are ten MS. volumes applicable to that period, and it is intended that subsequent publications should be of such a size as to admit of the abstracts of these being contained in not more than three volumes.

The Editor is indebted to Mr. David Donaldson for the carefully prepared Index, embracing every name which occurs in the abstracts. To Mr. George Neilson, F.S.A., Scot., he has also to offer acknowledgment for the assistance rendered by him while the book was passing through the press. Mr. Neilson read all the proof sheets and made many valuable suggestions which have been duly taken advantage of, and altogether the work has in many ways benefited by the discriminating attention he bestowed upon it.

¹ By the ancient Burgh Laws burgesses were not entitled to dispose of their heritages except under the pressure of poverty and urgent necessity, and even in such circumstances lengthened procedure at successive head courts of the burgh had to be observed before a sale could be carried through. In the sixteenth century the original restrictions had been much relaxed, but it was still customary to set forth that necessity instigated the sale. The formalities connected with the sale of a property in Glasgow (1280-90), in accordance with the old law, will be found in Sir James D. Marwick's "Charters and Documents relating to the History of Glasgow," part I, p. xv.; part II., p. 17.

246. PATRICK HOWSTOUNE. 6 November, 1555, between 3 and 4 p.m.

In the church of St. Giles of Edinburgh, at the altar of St. James the Apostle, Patrick Howstoune, of that ilk, appeared in presence of Francis Tenende, burges of the said burgh, in terms of lawful premonition, to receive the sums contained in four letters of reversion, together with three letters of assedation, for redemption of the lands of Lany and Aldirstoune, lying within the barony of Calder and sheriffdom of Edinburgh, according to the tenor of the said reversions granted by q. Kenthigern Tenende. The sum contained in the letters of reversion, amounting to 1010 merks Scots, having been laid upon the altar, in gold and silver, the said Patrick produced the said four letters of reversion, with the three letters of assedation—two whereof of the fourth part of the lands of Lany and the third of the half of the lands of Upper Aldirstoune, sealed and subscribed by the said Patrick, together with an assignation therein contained, to Agnes Hoppringeile, his mother, constituting her assignee in and to two letters of reversion of the lands of Lany; and also produced the instrument of premonition whereby the said Francis, as principal, together with George Dundas, son of q. James Dundas of that ilk, Mergaret Dundas, daughter of the said q. James, heritable possessors of one part of the said lands of Lany, and Mergaret Sandeland, mother of the said Mergaret, were warned to compear at the said altar, there to receive the said sums and letters of assedation for implement of the said letters of reversion, and for redemption and renunciation of the said lands. And because neither the said Francis, nor any other in his name was willing to receive the money and letters and free the lands, the said Patrick came to the personal presence of Archibald Dowglas, provost of Edinburgh, James Barroune, dean of guild, Mr. Alexander Grahame, treasurer of the said burgh, and required them to receive into their custody the said sums, with the said letters of assedation, for behoof of the said Francis and others having interest. And the said Patrick consigned in the hands of Mr. John Prestoune the sum of 345 merks, with a letter of assedation for redemption of the half of a fourth part of the lands of Lany, and consigned the remainder of the said sum, with the other two letters of assedation, in the hands of David Kynloicht, baker, and burgess of the said burgh, for redemption of the other half of the fourth part of the lands of Lany and of the lands of Uvyr Aldirstoune, for behoof of those having interest. Witnesses: Mr. Rechard Strange, advocate, David Kynloycht, John Howstoune; as regards the offering of the money to the provost and treasurer, found in the house of the provost, at the fourth hour afternoon: Andrew Murray of Blakbarony, the foresaid Mr. Rechard, Henry Ramsay, and the said John Howstoune; and as regards the consignment of money: Sir John Scott, the said Mr. Rechard, and Henry Ramsay.
